Public-private partnerships will necessarily require a balance between regulation and volunteerism, and they will be built on innovation, openness, and trust. In some cases, incentives or other measures will be necessary to promote private sector participation. DoDs efforts must also extend beyond large corporations to small and medium-sized businesses to ensure participation and leverage innovation. A collaborative national effort will develop common and workable solutions to policy problems that both increase cybersecurity and further the public good. DoD will continue to support the development of whole-of-government approaches for managing risks associated with the globalization of the information and communications technology sector. Many U. S. technology firms outsource software and hardware factors of production, and in some cases their knowledge base, to firms overseas. Additionally, increases in the number of counterfeit products and components demand procedures to both reduce risk and increase quality. Dependence on technology from untrusted sources diminishes the predictability and assurance that DoD requires, and DoD will...
