Excerpt: . . . service, open access, and flexible regulations - have since been adopted and endorsed by industry and political leaders in fora around the world, such as the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) meeting of telecommunications ministers in Seoul, Korea, the Summit of the Americas meeting in Miami last December, the G-7 ministerial meeting last February in Brussels, and the meeting of the G-9 7 leaders in Halifax. One wonders whether such an open and flexible global information infrastructure is still in the best interests of the United States and the world in light of the growing threats from information warfare, information terrorism and cyber crime. One must keep in mind this state of the world in assessing the efficacy of any proposed international agreement that portends to address the very serious and far-reaching effects of information warfare, information terrorism and cyber crime. Potential Impact Generally The potential impact of information warfare, information terrorism and...
