Excerpt from The Tragedy of Quebec: The Expulsion of Its Protestant Farmers The eighteenth century was near its end before the solitude of that vast region which lies south of the parishes that border the St. Lawrence, between the Chaudiere and the Richelieu, was disturbed by aught save the cry of the water fowl as it winged its way over lake Memphremagog, or the howl of the wolf from its rocky den on the slopes of Mount Tom. The old world had been rent by wars, dynasties had risen, flourished, and disappeared, and yet that bewitching expanse of forest, lake, and mountain, threaded by rivers beside which the Thames and Clyde are but streamlets, continued undisturbed, its beauty and possibilities of wealth alike unknown. From a sky as clear as that of Italy the sun bathed this region of romantic beauty summer after summer, autumn dyed its mantle of forest in hues of gold and scarlet, and winter mantled it in ice and snow, but all this loveliness for uncounted centuries was unseen by man, save when some lone Indian in search of game strayed from his fellows. It must be a baffling thought to the dweller of the Old World that a stretch of country larger and fairer than that for which kings fought and vast armies perished remained unowned and unoccupied down to a period almost within the memory of a few yet living.
