Forgotten Books, 2018. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from The Irrigation Age, Vol. 13 In View of the wide-spread suspicion of American investments, it was not surprising that the Rio Grand Dam Irrigation Company signally failed to place its bonds. But the directors continued to persevere in their efforts to carry out the objects of the company, being assured of the unanimous support of the land owners in the valley, and realizing that unless early steps are taken to impound the good waters of the Grande, the farming interests would for the most part speedily fall into desuetude, Finding that in the state of the money market it would be impossible to place the shares and bonds of the American company, and being advised that investors abroad would be more likely to entrust their money to an English company, managed by a Board of Directors of high rank and standing, responsible to the shareholders under English law. It was decided to raise the capital necessary for the proposed irrigation works by leasing to an English company, to be incorporated under the laws of England, the American company's franchise rights, privileges and undertakings. The best legal advice obtainable was taken as to the legality of the American company's rights, and upon being satisfied that a lease giving control only of the American company's property could not be construed by the most violent jingo of the anti-english party as constituting the holding of real estate, or as being in any way a violation of the Alien Act, the English company was incorporated. A Board of Directors consisting of gentlemen of exceptionally high standing was, with great difficulty, formed, capital was under written, and shares and debentures of...
