Excerpt from The Latin Poems of Leo XIII: Done Into English Verse The future Pontiff was only eighteen when he began to study theology, and at twenty-one was graduated Doctor of Divinity. That he was a deep, mature and able scholar, the Diary and Records of the old Roman College testify. Think for a moment of that magnificent work. At fifteen, he was leading a large class of rhetoric, at fifteen he had mastered Italian, was a Latinist to the core, and wrote Greek with facility. His taste was universal, and we find him working so hard at science, that he took the first honors for chemistry and physics, and was not far behind in mathematics. His keen intellect and calm reasoning powers made philosophy a delightful study. Honors fell thick upon him, and at the end of three years he was appointed Repetitor in the German College, where only the choicest of the ecclesiastical students of Germany are admitted, after a severe competitive examination.
