D. Blackmore published in 1882. It is set in the fictional village of Christowell on the eastern edge of Dartmoor. Plot introduction The complex and picturesque life which goes on in the parish of Christowell is the theme of the novel.The story begins with the garden where resides Captain Larks, alias Mr. Arthur, who is neither Mr. Arthur nor Captain Larks, but a mysterious soldier who renounced his own good name to save one who was his brother and fellow officer from disgrace. Misfortune has driven him into retirement, and so he lives among his flowers and fruit. Nobody knows anything about him, save the clergyman, Parson Short.Mr. Arthur has a daughter, Rose, who, after visiting him as a child during her holidays for several years, at last comes to live with him at his cottage. It is when she appears, however, that her father s troubles may be said to begin; for she falls in love with Jack Westcombe the son of a retired officer, whom Rose s father declines to...
