Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Peking and the Overland Route: With Maps, Plans, and Illustrations Changes have come in recent years, changes which have modernized and improved the city in many ways, but which have not altered the character of the place in any degree. They have simply covered the sore spots and the cesspools. In the Boxer year foreigners found Peking a network of filthy streets, ankle deep in mud, rut-worn, and impassable to anything but the native chair-cart. This contrasted strongly with the magnificence of the marble ways and granite courts, but it did not add to the beauty of the city as a whole. It was then a city of smells. Now there is certainly no city in China, under purely Chinese administration with better streets and a more wholesome atmosphere. The visitor who doubts this has only to pay a visit to any interior city of his choice to be convinced. The city now has a population of about more than half of whom live in the congested districts of the Southern or Chinese City. While the majority of these are of course northern Chinese of mixed blood, there are southerners and westerners from every province, Mongols, Manchus, Tibetans, people of Turkish descent, and quite a number in the north-east corner of the city of mixed Russian and Chinese blood. The merchants and crafts men of 17 provinces are represented by more than 300 guild halls. And in almost any street in the city one can hear spoken all the principle languages and dialects of the 18 provinces.
