Not illustrated. 1904 Excerpt: .like types in vogue, and it is to be presumed that a well directed effort was made by the framers of the same to embody therein the best features of the most perfect types. I fully realize that such a task was not an easy one. It seems to me, however, that said code, in its present form, is incomplete, as regards the subject matter of the same, and also vague and uncertain in a number of particulars, more especially by reason of a number of amendments of doubtful purport. With regard to matters properly embodied in such a code, my views are necessarily based upon types which it has been my care to examine, also upon what seems to me should be embodied in an orderly and complete system, such views being offered for your consideration, with the hope that they contain something, which, with...
