Forgotten Books, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Excerpt from Mr. Lincoln Goes to the Theater: From the Journal of the Illinois State Historical Society He once told Judge Davis, Mrs. Hillis is the only woman, besides my wife, who ever appreciated me enough to pay me a compliment, and the doughty jurist - with a sidelong glance at his protege s gaunt frame and weather-beaten face - snorted, Lord, Mr. Lincoln, I thought you was a universal favorite with the fair sex! Like many stage folks of the period (or today, for that matter) Mrs. Hillis published her reminiscences. An interesting passage in this otherwise commonplace document tells of an evening in a Springfield hotel, when Lincoln, goaded by his associates into performing, recited with tremendous effect the poem Mortality, containing the line, Why should the spirit of mortal be proud? Later, he told Mrs. Hillis that he knew neither the author of the poem nor its name but that he would be proud to copy it off for her. He then retired to his room, laboriously transcribed the verses and presented them to the actress the following morning. Since the Newhall Players were going on the road that day, Lincoln and Mrs. Hillis bade each other elaborate farewells. They did not meet again. One of young Mr. Lincoln s early theatrical thrills must have occurred in 1839. Soon after he had set up in law practice in Springfield. It was the winter when the elder Joseph Jefferson presented for the first time in Illinois John Howard Payne s play, Clari, the Maid of Milan, and Lincoln was surely in the audience when Mrs. Jefferson sang the song hit of the show Home.
