Not illustrated. 1881 Excerpt: .as if it had drifted over it, as dust in the winter, when it was forming along shore, showing that it must have come from some coast, where banks or beaches of fine material, such as clay, sand or mud, exists. All the pans have their angles rounded off, and look soft and spongy. The larger ones have generally a depression, containing water, in the centre. They are evidently much worn and melted, being all undermined at the edges, and sometimes projecting more broadly below than above water. Many of them are composed of laye-i-s agglomerated at different angles. The tops of the highest pans would be four or five feet above the water, but most of them are small and flat. When they are bowled over by the ship they generally leave a whitish-looking cloud of mud in the water around. In addition to the...
