Excerpt from The Southern Planter, Vol. 15: Devoted to Agriculture, Horticulture, and the Household Arts; February, 1855 Water is always an important element in rural scenery, and where its presence can be taken advantage of, it seldom fails in improving the natural characteristic beauties of the locality. But there is no more frequent or greater mistake made. Than in the forming of ponds and artificial lakes, where the supply of water, such as. A running stream, does not admit, of the whole being kept in a state of purity. Stagnant waters are offensive to the sense of smell, and injurious to the health of animal. Life, and health, ought to be, more important than ornamentation; But even in the absence of the sanitary view of the question, the introducing of water where nature forbids it, has hitherto been the most common mistake in ancient and modern ornamentation. When water can be produced, it should be so arranged as to appear to occupy a hollow. Studying nature in, this, as in every other detail, will produce harmony....
