Excerpt from The Illustrated Archaeologist, Vol. 1: A Quarterly Journal Devoted to the Study of the Antiquities of Great Britain; The Development of the Arts and Industries of Man in Past Ages; And the Survivals of Ancient Usages and Appliances in the Present Probability made here. And who can limit the use of the Flint and steel? Matches, as we know them, are but of yesterday, some fifty years old at best; but the Flint and steel enjoys an age-reputation actually greater than that of the Pyramids. In fact, there is every reason to believe that this has been the method employed in Northern Europe for making fire as far back as the age of stone itself, when, for want of steel, man used the nodules of iron pyrites, such as are found in the chalk and in the clay beds of various geological formations. But to go back beyond the historical age. Of the tinder-box, the neighbourhood of Brandon was a depot of Flint-work of quite another kind in the Stone Age itself, when the people of that age made their weapons and implements of the Flint obtained from some old workings which are now known as Grimes Graves. These remarkable old pits were sunk down to the level of the Flint vein, and in them have been found implements of Flint in every stage of manufacture, together with the curious pick, fashioned from an antler of the red deer, which was their rough means of getting out the precious Flint. It is a most interesting fact that the iron-headed pick in use to-day clearly owes its form to, or, in other words, is a descendant of, this primitive pick-axe....
