PAPERS AND DISCUSSIONS ON EXPERIMENTS WITH STEEL (CLASSIC REPRINT) (PAPERBACK)*DOWNLOAD

Forgotten Books, 2017. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Excerpt from Papers and Discussions on Experiments With Steel Steel as a material for shipbuilding and boiler-making has for years been used to some extent. Its general introduction has, however, been delayed, owing to the fact that it could not be regarded as invariably reliable, as it frequently occurred that amongst a batch of plates, the greater part of which had been considered satisfactory, a proportion was found not to possess the properties required, and to fail in the ship yard or boiler yard. It has been argued, and probably with some truth, that in some cases a prejudice was unjustly created against the use of steel owing to its failure under treatment which should never have been applied to it. The mild steel, which is now being introduced, is of a softer and more ductile character, and much better able to bear the manipulation to which it is subjected, still in some respects it requires special care in its treatment. Steel is mainly distinguished from wrought iron by its property of becoming harder and more brittle when raised to a red heat and cooled suddenly in water. This peculiarity is attributed to the former containing a greater amount of carbon than the latter, in which generally only a trace of it is found. Steel which contains about 1 per cent. of carbon possesses a very high tensile strength; takes a high degree of temper when heated and cooled suddenly in water, but being brittle in character is unsuited for shipbuilding and boiler-making, both on account of its uncertainty in withstanding the necessary operations in the course of manufacture, and also because of the danger of employing a brittle material...
