

Postmodern Proust (Hardback)

By Margaret E. Gray

University of Pennsylvania Press, United States, 2017. Hardback. Condition: New. Reprint 2016 ed.. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . Postmodern Proust? Few writers are so routinely cited as high modernist, particularly by theorists of postmodernism, who thus consign A la recherche du temps perdu to the canons of the past. Although some critics have cautiously begun to notice Proust's surreptitiously postmodern audacity, Margaret E. Gray's study is the first sustained attempt to bring postmodern perspectives fully to bear on the Proustian text. This is accomplished by using the postmodern as a diversified critical toolkit to solicit Proust's daring narrative practice and by stressing a commitment to cultural contextualization. Bringing together rhetorical, psychoanalytic, feminist, and interdisciplinary approaches, Gray explores Proust's postmodern treatment of the conventions of genre, narrator, narration, representation, closure, and reception. After examining Proust's scrambling of generic boundaries, Gray goes on to investigate his text's use of an evacuated subjectivity; its unfolding as a forgetful and inventive narrating act; its formulation of the feminine and figuration as strategies to subvert representation; and its depiction of closure as a critical delusion. A concluding chapter scrutinizes contemporary conditions of reception in...
