Morrill: An Address Delivered at New Haven, Connecticut, November 14, 1900, at the Request of the Executive Committee of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations His career seemed thus to be practically completed. He had succeeded at an early age in reaching a position which most men expect to reach, if at all, at the end of a much longer and severer period of toil. We do not find that his success awakened the slightest trace of envy in any mind. His courtesy in dealing with customers, his absolute and unvarying integrity, his gentle helpfulness toward the lowly and the less fortunate, his genial sunniness of temper, his watchful and intelligent study of the needs of the community and his foresight in anticipating them had won for him a unique place among his neighbors; so that, while he was little known beyond the borders of his own county, he there easily took first rank among the most respected and honored citizens.
