HE cold wind of November was whirl ing the withered autumn leaves along the city streets, chasing them into corners, whisking them out again, tossing them aloft in the air, and treating them very badly, and in a manner to which they were quite unaccustomed, for all summer long they had danced on the boughs, and the sun had smiled as the wind sighed so softly through the green branches, and coaxed them down one by one and now that they were down, how rude it was to bluster and roar, and chase them in such a furious way. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Find more at This book is a reproduction of an important historical work.
