Excerpt: . . . enforced though it was by a decree of the Court of Session; and it required another rebellion, followed by prosecutions for treason in which the plea of constraint was frequently tendered, and sometimes accepted, on behalf of the accused, 1 to bring home to Parliament --under some misapprehension, it is true--the necessity of sweeping away the whole system by which coercive powers could be exercised by individuals to the detriment of the public peace. This was accomplished by two statutes, the first of which transferred to the Crown the jurisdictions incident to feudalism which in England had been reduced to insignificance by the Great Charter of 1215, and the second put an end to the holding of land in ward, or, in other words, on condition of military service, which, under the designation of knight service, had been abolished in England by a resolution...
