EFFECT OF PARK GRASSLAND MANAGEMENT ON C-FLUXES IN TEMPERATE ECOSYSTEM

CreateSpace Independent Publishing Platform. Paperback. Condition: New. This item is printed on demand. 34 pages. Dimensions: 9.0in. x 6.0in. x 0.1in. Living cells need a constant supply of energy, which for heterotrophic microflora is derived from the transformation of organic matter such as cellulose, proteins, nucleotides and humified compounds. Energy supplying reactions in the cell are redox reactions based on the transfer of electrons from a donor to an acceptor. Through aerobic respiration that is the oxidation of organic matter by aerobic micro-organisms oxygen functions as the terminal acceptor of the electrons. The metabolic activities of soil micro-organisms can therefore be quantified by measuring the CO<sub>2</sub> production or O<sub>2</sub> consumption. Soil respiration is one of the oldest and still most frequently used parameters for quantifying microbial activities in soils. Basal respiration is defined as respiration without the addition of organic substance to soil. Substrate-induced respiration (SIR) is the soil respiration measured in the presence of an added substrate such as glucose. Respiration is not only restricted to micro-organisms but it is also carried out by other organisms inhabiting the soils. Like other metabolic activities it depends on the physiological state of the cells and is influenced by different factors in the soil. Respiration is influenced by soil moisture, temperature, the availability of nutrients, soil structure and tillage. Air drying significantly reduces soil respiration. Re-moistened soils however show very high initial activities; probably as a result of the high concentrations of easily degradable organic compounds such as amino and organic acids caused by chemical and physical processes at the moistening of dry soils. The re-moistening of air dry soils containing carbonate also causes the release of abiotic CO<sub>2</sub>. In this case it is recommended that the O<sub>2</sub> consumption is measured. Soil respiration decreases with the depth of soil and correlates significantly...
