General Accounting Office, 2003 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)54032029 Subject: Database security -- United States. Excerpt: . . . FDIC has acted to enhance its service continuity program. For example, it ( 1 ) updated and conducted tests of its service continuity plan, ( 2 ) completed business continuity plans for all its facilities and conducted tests of these plans, and ( 3 ) established an alternate backup site to support its network and other computing resources. However, FDIC has not yet performed unannounced testing of its business continuity plan. Such tests are more realistic than announced tests and more accurately measure the readiness of staff for emergency situations. Further, FDIC had not ensured that the emergency personnel lists included in its business continuity plan are current. We identified 66 FDIC employees whose names were in the emergency personnel list but who had separated from FDIC, including 13 staff listed as key emergency team members. Without current emergency personnel lists, FDIC risks not being able to restore its critical business operations in a timely manner. FDIC has since established new procedures to ensure that emergency personnel lists remain current. FDIC officials said that they would incorporate unannounced testing of the business continuity plan into the 2003 operating plan, and would conduct these unannounced tests by December 31 of this year. The primary reason for FDICs continuing weaknesses in information Computer Security system controls is that it has not yet fully developed and implemented a Program Enhanced, comprehensive corporate program to manage computer security. As 9 described in our May 1998 study of security management best practices, a but Full comprehensive computer security management program requires the Implementation Not following five...
