J. H. McIlvaine, D.D., At the Dinner of the Church Club of the Diocese of Pittsburgh, November 14, 1911 The Episcopate is the organ and instrument of the Catholic Church. Consecrating with its touch all human life, continuous throughout the ages, the Catholic Church gathers up the accumulated treasures of the past, and holds them in trust for the future. Of this trusteeship the Episcopate is the organ. It voices the authority of the whole Church, which may be resolved into Catholic consent. It is not invested with authority which is personal and arbitrary, but is the mouth piece of the authority of the whole Church. It is a bond of unity and catholicity, linking the Church of today with the Church of the past, and the Church throughout the world, carrying us back through all the Christian centuries to the days of the Apostles them selves. Our unity lies not in our relation to a common creed or theological system, but to a living line of living men. It is the organ and instrument of the Church in its larger aspect, its more general functions, as distinguished from its local and parochial ministries. The tendency of our Church is towards parochialism. Each parish is a little world in itself, and the thought, the interest, the effort of its clergy are concentrated upon it. This is necessarily so, for concentration is the condition of success to-day in every department of labor, and the cares, the duties, the demands of the parish are so various and exacting as...
