Tony Valentine drove from Chicago toward Texas with his pregnant wife, anticipating a long life of law enforcement in his newly accepted position as a Deputy Sheriff in the Uvalde County Sheriffs Department. He did not know that an assassin was waiting in ambush. The attempt to kill Valentine failed, but what appears to be an accidental highway crash with an eighteen-wheeler kills Tonys wife and baby. Sheriff Jackson visits Tony in a San Antonio hospital, while the injured deputy is recuperating from his injuries; the sheriff reveals his suspicions that the wreck is not an accident, but the work of the McCaskills, a sophisticated family in control of criminal activity in parts of South Texas. When Tony learns later that Sheriff Jackson had committed suicide, he vows to go undercover and to bring down the McCaskill Empire. Upon learning that Tony might be investigating the family, A. J. McCaskill, the head of the family, declares, If hes in Texas, Ill pay 1, 000, 000 to anyone who kills Valentine. If he is still alive when Max and I return from Switzerland, hold him for me. I will cut his throat myself! McCaskill does not know that Tony has planted listening devices in McCaskills office and hears McCaskill put a price on Tonys head. Tony responds, Okay, A. J. McCaskill, you declared war on me when you killed my wife and baby. Now, well see who wins this war. With his plan in place to bring down the McCaskill clan, by moon and starlight, Tony loaded a clip in the rifle and gave the silencer an extra tightening twist. Satisfied, he balanced the gun in his right hand and the video camera in his left and walked toward the...
