Excerpt from Instructions to Meteorological Observers in India: Being the First Part of the Indian Meteorologist s Vade-Mecum Lastly, it is not infrequent to find in the registers of temperature published in official reports, not the actual observations, but certain values which are called means. But it is very rarely stated how these means have been computed. One person reads an ordinary thermometer at 10 A. M. And 4 P. M., and gives the average of the two readings; an other gives the average of his maximum and minimum and in some registers which lately came under my notice, this mean temperature was obtained by adding together the readings of a minimum and maximum thermometer recorded and reset both at 10 A. M. And 4 P. M. And divid ing by four. This really amounted to giving, as the mean temperature of the day, the average of the highest and lowest temperatures, of 10 in the morning and of 4. O clock of the previous afternoon. The proper meaning of the term mean will be explained further on; but it is clear that the results of the above three methods will all be different, and, indeed, only one of them even approximates to what the term is understood to imply.
