Watch, while I drop some seeds which have their coverings on into this glass of water, she commanded, holding it up to view. Now I will put some of the seeds without their coverings in and see what happens. Those with the coverings float, and those without them sink, cried several children at once. Can you see why? Receiving no reply, she pointed to three little swellings on the outside of the cover. They are made of a corky material and act to float the seed on water. It makes the seeds float just like a life preserver holds you up in the water, Ned O'Brien remarked, rising in his excitement, and poking the seeds to try and make them sink. Can any of you children see, that it is an advantage to Curled Dock to have its seeds...
