Springer. Paperback. Condition: New. 132 pages. Dimensions: 9.5in. x 6.1in. x 0.4in. Highest level disorders of vision constitute a topic that is alluring, being obscure or even mysterious. For well over a century, neurologists have minutely studied visual receptors, the transmission of the impulse, the vagaries of ocular movements and pupillary anomalies, but they have relatively neglected the problems of what supervenes when disease afflicts the most caudal areas of the visual apparatus. Even the drama of total blindness is something from which neuro-ophthalmologists have tended to avert their gaze. We still await a definitive, single-author work embracing the whole gamut of centrally induced affections of sight. These remarks do not overlook the numerous communications, even major works, dealing with some isolated aspect of disordered visual perception. The German language literature has been outstanding in such intimate and exciting studies of various facets of a clinical gem elaborately cut. Dr. K6lmels monograph bears out these views. Without resort to experimentation - for in such a project no animal model exists - the researcher has had to rely upon his clinical skills. Of vital importance was the information volunteered by the patient whose experiences are so bizarre, so unexpected as to exceed the victims command of verbal expression. Being in essence purely subjective, their nature and indeed their very existence cannot be established unequivocally. Caveat auditor. Here is where the investigators experience and clinical skill comes into play. This item ships from multiple locations. Your book may arrive from Roseburg,OR, La Vergne,TN. Paperback.
