Excerpt from Progress Report of the Regional Research Laboratories: Remarks of Dr. Henry G. Knight, Chief, Bureau of Agricultural Chemistry and Engineering, United States Department of Agriculture, Before the Land Grant College Meeting, Chicago, Illinois, Tuesday, November 11, 1941 Before leaving the cellulose topic I might tell you about the Bureau's work on the water chestnut which is clogging navigable streams in increasing numbers along the Eastern Seaboard and in sections of the Gulf Coast region. One day last summer President Roosevelt was cruising down the Potomac River accompanied by Secretary Wickard. The President suggested that Secretary Wickard have some of the department scientists look into the possibility of making paper or some other industrial product from the thousands of acres of this floating menace to navigation.
