Executive in Passage: When Life Lets You Know Its Time to Change, Let That Knowing Lead You

By Donald Marrs

Barrington Sky Publishing. Paperback. Condition: New. 318 pages. Dimensions: 8.9in. x 5.9in. x 0.8in. Executive in Passage (Making Sense of Crisis: A Story of Enlightened Change) is a healing book a powerful story about engaging life-disrupting changes and discovering your path to a level of triumph beyond what most people believe possible. This is an intimate diary, a true story, of a top advertising executives struggle to find satisfaction in his career and happiness in his life. I had quit smoking but was making ads for Marlboro. I was working on Kelloggs while restricting the kids intake of presweetened cereals. I was asked to keep GMs gas guzzlers selling during the nations worst oil crisis. These clients were the largest billings in the house, and the most exciting projects for creative people, but I could barely stomach working on them. A crushing incident during a major client presentation brings Marrs to a breaking point. He finally stops resisting change, then quickly discovers that what he thinks will be a simple career change becomes a passionate quest for whole-life fulfillment. With insightful storytelling, rather than the headiness of a how-to book, Executive in Passage escorts the reader beyond the pain and uncertainty...
