But, in this instance, I should have been obliged to bore through the pier to fix that which should examine the nadir of the circle, which was likely to injure it; and I used the following method instead: Let B and D represent two of the reading microscopes of the circle (whose graduation runs in the direction IB), and let I and 11 be two others; call the half sum of B and D = S, of I and 11 = 2, / = S - 2; now, if II and I be set at the divisions T and 180 + T, 2 will give the position of the diameter (T, 180 + T) independent of excentricity, if those two divisions be correct. Let the correction they may require be denoted by the symbol e T, At the same time, suppose the division T + 0 to be at D, T + F + 180 to be at B, then obviously we have the equation, 1 = S + e T + 0 - 2 - e T + angle under lines through the zeros of the four microscopes. As we suppose the readings both positive, this angle is less than 6 by a constant r, and 0 = e T + -e T + d - r now turn the circle till T + 0 comes to II, and T + 20 must be at D; whence 0 = e T + ...
