Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Shakespeare's Handwriting: Greenwood, (Sir) Granville George Shakespeare's Handwriting Everybody knows the saying, attributed to a certain judge of the mid-Victorian period, to the effect that the unveracious might be divided into liars, damned liars, and expert witnesses. This was, of course, a saying more jocular than judicial, but, like many another exaggerated statement, it has, nevertheless, a substratum of truth. To illustrate, for example, the untrustworthiness of expert witnesses, I need only refer to a case which was tried at the Law Courts while I was practising at the Bar. At that time the two great experts whose services were constantly requisitioned in cases of disputed handwriting, were Messrs. Inglis Netherclift, and, in the particular case referred to, one of these great men was engaged on behalf of the plaintiff and the other on behalf of the defendant. The trial took place before a Judge and Jury, when the two handwriting experts went into the box in support of their respective clients, and each, with equal positiveness, pledged his reputation in support of...
