Wallace to the Committee on Railway Terminals of the City Council of Chicago: On Conditions Relative to the Proposed Union Station Company Ordinance Proposed by Mr. Bion J. Arnold and Also on the Recommendations Made by the Officers of the Chicago Plan Commission In consideration of the Union Station ordinance, the fundamental question to be determined is the location of the new station. It would seem fair and just to consider this question on its merits alone, as comparing it with the several proposed locations: A. What is known as the Adams Street location; B. What is known as the Harrison Street location; C. What is known as the 12th Street location. The Adams street location is either preferable to the other two locations, or it is not. Considering the present situation, there would seem to be no question as to this, the most important controlling element being its relation to the convenience of the public using it and the general interests of the public as a whole. As no proposition has been advanced or considered looking to the abandonment of the property used for railroad purposes north of Harrison street, and as this development does not interfere in any way with the freedom of movement between the South and West Sides, or interfere with the Chicago Plan, there would seem to be no valid reason why this site is not preferable. While certain future eventualities, which are entirely conjectural, might make the Harrison street situation a desirable one, no one is wise enough to predict to a certainty whether this event will happen, or when. However, as the...
