Excerpt: . . . which for power and magnificence has never been equalled in England. When the head of the great house of Neville fell, his fall shook the whole feudal system in England, which after that event, dragged on but a maimed existence till the era of the Commonwealth, when Cromwells victorious troopers laid it for ever in the dust. How Sir Robert managed to avoid being led into the whirlpool in which were wrecked so many noble houses is almost inexplicable, especially when we consider how many of his own Chapel at Liversedge Hall, (Front elevation.) kindred were engaged in it and that many of the great events in this bloody contest amongst the aristocracy of England, which cost the lives of more than a hundred thousand of the bravest men in the realm, happened in this locality. Sir John Neville, knight, the son and heir of...
