Excerpt from Canned Foods: Modern Processes of Canning in the United States, General System of Grading, and Description of Products Available for Export Very little progress was made in the canning industry in the United States prior to 1855, the principal pack being sea food, which in a fresh condition could not be transported inland with safety. At that time the cities were small, and fruits and vegetables Of all kinds were grown in their immediate vicinity and delivered fresh by wagon. There was not the same demand for something out of season or from other lands that has developed later, and aside from this, living conditions were not such as to compel the use of foods in concentrated form and free from waste. It was not until the close Of the following decade, the period of the Civil War, that the superiority of canned foods over those which were dried, salted, and pickled became common knowledge. The soldiers m detention camps and hospitals, though meagerly supplied with canned foods, learned of their excellence and value and later carried the inf orma tion to every section. Subsequent to this period domestic and commer cial canning increased constantly, though somewhat slowly, because of.a newly acquired popular prejudice that had to be broken down, and, in addition, economical methods of manufacture had to be developed. At the present time the United States is not only the largest producer of canned foods in the world, but likewise the largest consumer. The industry has been developed upon the principle that the foods go to the consumer in the most attractive and palatable form, are convenient for holding in any place and for a reasonable time, and being...
