Foundation Grillages As a means of avoiding large masses of masonry and deep excavations, it has become the practice to use in foundation work, grillages composed of beams imbedded in concrete. These grillages are constructed of one, two or three layers of beams, depending on the load to be carried and the capacity of the earth to resist pressure. Such beams should be spaced at least 2yi or 3 apart in the clear between flanges, so as to enable the concrete to be readily placed and tamped. The top tier of beams in all cases should be held in position and alignment by bolting the beams together by tie rods with separators made of gas pipe. Where more than one tier of beams is used, it is not the custom to use separators and tie rods on the lower tiers. Pipe separators are preferable to the usual cast iron separators as they interfere less with the continuity of the concrete. In the design of grillages, it is customary to assume that the load supported by each beam in a tier is equal to the total load on the...
