On this, as on similar occasions in the past there were gathered from near and from far, from store, office, school, pulpit, mill and farm, in goodly numbers those who glory in the name or blood of Poor. And here in old Andover, amidst scenes, though familiar to us all, yet dear to every New England heart, we spent a day long to be remembered. Here we renewed old acquaintances, formed new friendships, while the hand of kinship was extended without formality. And whether engaged in social converse or taking part in the proceedings of the day, or as one family at the noon hour, with thankful hearts for our many...
