Excerpt: .and irregular extension of the corneal limbus, chalk-white discoloration of superficial corneal opacities, circumscribed roundish opacities and plethoric vessels in the lower and posterior corneal layers, anterior synechiae in the sinus of the chamber, roundish defects in the anterior strata of the iris, and persistent chemosis without any other cause. The local prognosis depends upon whether the tuberculous infection (which in acute tuberculosis of the iris often originates from tuberculosis of the bronchial glands or the lungs) is limited to the iris and ciliary body or the chorioid, or whether other parts of the eye are affected. In the latter case, termination in blindness with or without phthisis bulbi often occurs in spite of the most painstaking efforts. Treatment always occupies a long time, usually six months. The general constitution must be strengthened and creosote preparations administered (guaiaicol, carbon., histosan, etc.). The treatment should...
