The public mind was then in a mood to sympathise with a review of our peaceful past, and to enjoy an effort so tranquil and scholarly to gather up those suggestions of wisdom and hope which may be derived from our former experience, to guide and encourage our future. Blessed peace! How bright is its sunshine, as in memory we contrast it with the stern and solemn realities which now surround us. The present hour seems to me to demand a very different theme. We are now called to learn the lessons of adversity: we must now find strength for an hour of conflict; fortitude to endure and hope to sustain and cheer us in darkness and gloom. It is fit that...
