

Women And Politics Worldwide

By A K Yadav

MD Publications Pvt Ltd, New Delhi, 2010. Hardcover. Condition: New. 229pp., Despite the fact that womens interest in politics is increasing and that almost all political parties have promised higher female representation in politics, womens organizations mostly appear to believe that these developments will not end in women deputies. Womens representation in politics is not linked to whether a country is rich or poor. Compared to men, women still face numerous obstacles when entering politics. In spite of the fact that countries around the world have recognized the under-representation of women in politics and started to adopt measures to address the deficit, the world average proportion of women members of national - level legislatures stood at a mere 17 percent. To date, moreover elected women head only 13 of the worlds 194 states and governments. Understanding that womens participation is central to democratic governance. International IDEA works to improve womens representation and participation in politics.
