The pyramid of baggage rapidly disappears in the portals of the capacious baggage car; the uniformed conductor shouts All aboard! the last farewells are hastily spoken; the iron horse snorts as he leaps forward toward the mountains and the sea, and Off We Go. The traveler usually sees but the seamy side of the cities he passes through by rail. Not so of Chicago, as he looks through the clear plate-glass of the Michigan Central Palace Cars. For miles as he speeds along with accelerated motion, he sees on the one side the lovely lake, placid, rippled or storm-tossed, according to its varying moods; on the other, verdant lawns and blooming parterres,...
