The dying nations are those with little or no transportation facilities. A few years ago, two Imperial governments of Europe - Germany and Russia - gave to the world their indorsement of the idea that modern transportation facilities form the surest foundation upon which to build and sustain a nation. The Emperor of Germany in a speech to the Prussian Diet impressed upon his hearers the great importance of extending the railroads and the navigable canals. Moreover, in order that the German nation might have knowledge of the most advanced theories and practice in the construction and operation of railways, an Imperial German Commission was sent to the United States for the purpose of examining American railways and making such recommendations as their investigation should suggest. In the report of this Commission one of the first sentences is, Lack of speed, lack of comfort, lack of cheap rates, are the charges brought against the German Empires railways, as compared with those of the United States. The immense sums which the Russians are devoting to the extension of their railways entirely overshadow the demands of both the army and navy. They have in Japan more than one hundred locomotives that were built in the United States. In Russia, they have nearly one thousand American locomotives, and practically every railway in Great Britain has ordered locomotives in this country since the war with...
