Another missionary writes: This little flock were compelled to build, by the unwillingness of those who own the house (in which they had previously been permitted to worship once a month) to allow us this privilege any longer, so that our people must either build or disband. Their building cost 5, 000, of which they were only able to pay 800. Several members became security for the debt, and mortgaged their farms or homesteads. This burden they are no longer able to bear, having lost their crops for two years in succession. And now one of the elders must sell his farm to prevent the accumulation of interest which neither he nor the rest of the church are able to pay. In justice to myself, I must say, all this happened before I came. Had my predecessor been a man of practical sense or experience, the church would have been saved this debt, by building within their means. It now devolves upon me to relieve them if possible. But how am I to effect this I may go to the General Assembly (as I am a Commissioner) and by personal solicitation or application to a few churches try to raise the amount to relieve this suffering brother and save the honor of the church. But this I dislike; and if I had the money I would rather pay it myself than...
