Character Traits for Social Interaction Have you ever thought what youth would become without your input? Did envious, self-centered, or indifferent to humanity come to mind? Character traits are the principles we hold to which determine our personality. The Golden Rule states that we should treat others the way we want to be treated. Timeless principles that positively shape our character and help us uphold the Golden Rule are care, enthusiasm, peacefulness, patience, kindness, goodness, expectancy, gentleness, and self-control. My Character Journal is an easy-to-use educational tool to assist you in teaching youth how to take on these principles as part of their character. By learning these principles they will be able to follow the Golden Rule as they interact with others who may have different attitudes, beliefs and customs from their own. Look inside My Character Journal to find examples of people who have put these principles into practice as well as guided writing pages for youth to write about their own experiences practicing these principles. With continued practice, youth can: -discover more about who they are and what they believe in - develop traits helpful for treating others the way they want to be treated -become examples to their peers -use these principles as a foundation to build upon as they become adults. With My Character Journal youth can accomplish all these and much more! Take a deliberate action to positively affect a youth s character by picking up your copy today.
