Blood Thunder Tales of the West, United States, 2014. Paperback. Condition: New. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand . When thieves snatch a statue of the bird-headed Egyptian god, Thoth, and drop its owner from a third-story window, 1950 s private detective Axel Hatchett is hired to solve the crime. But wait! - there are actually three statues, and one of them may contain a treasure map! Hatchett enlists the aid of his humorous hash-slinging fiancée and a snake-handling English professor to help solve an eventual murder in this cozy, humorous noir about three cursed - and cursing! - birds. We caught 50 s noir detective Axel Hatchett in an expansive mood, and he told us about his investigation of the Three Cursing Birds, the fourth in the humorous noir series, Axel Hatchett Mysteries. Here s what he told us while he lit up one of his infamous cheap cigars: What do you know about sacred ibises, or the old Egyptian god, Thoth? I knew next to nothing about such things until a few nights before Christmas. That s when my old professor friend, Eben Mulford, got me out of bed with a midnight phone call. He told me that a former colleague of his, an English professor named Kirsten Lund, had been attacked that night and dropped out of the upstairs window of her cozy Victorian house. She ended up with a broken leg. Quite the intriguing crime. Dr. Lund wasn t interested in having a gumshoe like me look into her little accident, so Eben hired me himself. Seems like he had some romantic feelings for the good doctor. I couldn t blame him - Lund was a looker, even if she was on the wrong side of fifty. She was talented, too, and...
