The composer of the Broadway masterpiece West Side Story as well as operas like Candide, film scores like On the Waterfront, and major symphonic works, Leonard Bernstein (191890) was the best loved and most successful American conductor of his generation. The late Paul Myers a freelance classical record producer whose work for Decca, Columbia, and Naxos brought him into contact with Bernstein over many years here covers all aspects of Bernstein's career, from his extraordinary early rise to fame as a conductor to his world renown as a composer. Myers examines the paradoxes of a man who was brilliant, articulate, and charming but who could also be vain, egocentric, and demanding." Paul Myers writes concisely and entertainingly .
