Excerpt from Practical English Prosody and Versification, or Description of the Different Species of English Verse: With Exercises in Scanning and Versification, Gradually Accommodated to the Various Capacities of Youth at Different Ages, and Calculated to Produce Correctness of Ear and Taste in Reading and Writing Poetry I have some-where read, that earth, turned up from deep prts, produces plants before unknown in the vicinity. -have the seeds of those plants lain dormant in their dark recesses, from the time when the general deluge, or some later inundation, provi dentially overwhelmed the forests of our isle, to preserve them for remote posterity under the more convenient form of pit-coal i - Thnt question, if answerable by any other than the Creator alone, I leave to he answered by those who are better qualified, than I, to investigate and explain the wondrous Opera tions of almighty wisdom and power. For these weighty considerations, the practice of verse-making has been recommended by Locke, Chesterfield, Franklin, Ste, and, although it has not yet been publicly adopted as a necessary part of an English education, it is to he hoped that every teacher who aspires to eminence in the professipn, will henceforward bestow on it that serious attention which it so evidently deserves. Indeed, from the opinions which I have heard on the subject, I eu certain not a doubt, that those heads of seminaries who shall make it a regular branch in their system of instruction, will, in the estimation of all good judges, gain a decided preference over those who neglect it.
