National Security Strategy: Hearings Before the Committee on Armed Services, United States Senate, One Hundred Fourth Congress, First Session, February 2 and 7, 1995 Chairman Thurmond. The committee will come to order. We have the pleasure of having Dr. Kissinger with us today. Dr. Kissinger, I am pleased to welcome you to today s hearing as we take up the serious matter of America s national security planning. We are honored by your presence, and we look forward to your discussion of America s interests, goals, and commitments. It is ironic that the passing of the Cold War has in many ways complicated our national security planning. We no longer have a single, overwhelming threat to guide our thinking in this area. Instead, we face diverse and more unpredictable threats. In this environment, it is all the more necessary for the United States to have a clear national security strategy to guide our military planning and operations. Given the uncertain nature of the threats we are likely to face in the future, we must find an appropriate basis for our...
