Excerpt: .should oblige them to seek the further aid of foreigners. But, as a writer observed, the solitary court of London was obliged to suppress her indig nation. Neither her resentment, chagrin, or address, could prevent a measure which Great Britain considered as particularly injurious to herself. The British minister expostulated warmly with the court of Petersburg, on the constant attention and regard hitherto shewn on every occasion, to the flag and commerce of Russia, by Great Britain. He declared there was a continuance of the same disposition and conduct in his court, and reminded the empress of the reciprocal ties of friendship, and the commercial interests, by which the two nations were mutually bound. The confederacy too formidable for opposition in their present situation, an equivocal, rather than an explicit reply to the declaration of the empress, was sent by the court of Great Britain to the British envoy resident at Petersburg, dated April the twenty-third, one thousand seven hundred and eighty. While this indecisive mode of conduct was observed by the court of Great Britain, the / other European powers had not only readily Chap. m. agreed to the proposition for an armed neutral-i?go ity, but appeared generally pre-disposed to a friendly intercourse with America, if not unequivocally to support her claim to independence. A general state of danger from foreign combinations seemed to threaten the empire of Great Britain, with a convulsion in almost all its parts; at the same time,...
