

Proteases, Protease Inhibitors and Protease-Derived Peptides

By Cheronis, J. / Repine

Book Condition: New. Publisher/Verlag: Springer, Basel | Importance in Human Pathophysiology and Therapeutics | Proteases, Protease-Derived Peptides and Protease Inhibitors Many physiological as well as pathophysiological processes are mediated by proteases and the products of their actions, protease-derived peptides. However, the uncontrolled activity of proteases can be extraordinarily destructive and dangerous to normal biological systems. As a result, biology has gone to great lengths to control the activities of the proteases involved in these systems by developing a series of both highly specific (regulatory) and non-specific (protective) anti-proteases. The protease/anti-protease balancing activities include the normal homeostatic processes of clotting and clot lysis, hormonal regulation of blood pressure and the control of the inflammatory response represented by both the humoral (the kallikrein-kinin and complement systems) and cellular (neutrophil and macrophage derived proteases) components of the inflammation. Examples of successful therapies directed at these protease dependent systems include the use of warfarin and heparin to control thrombosis and streptokinase or tissue plasminogen activator (tPA) for the acceleration of clot dissolution. Similarly, the use of angiotensin converting enzyme (ACE, a type of limited activity protease or peptidase) inhibitors has made a significant impact on the treatment of hypertension. Lastly, the restitution of normal antiprotease...
