Many of the old Irish traditions and tales dwell upon the world beyond our own, the shadow world of spirits. Every village and landmark has a tale attached to it, a good many of them rooted in pagan beliefs from prehistoric times. Others are more modern, and deal with historic tragedies such as the English invasion, the Potato Famine, or the Troubles. According to some locals, ghosts seem to haunt every historic building and place, acting as symbols of the past that still haunts this troubled land. For example, at Aughagreagh in County Longford there s a wall running alongside a road. It s just a typical drystone wall like so many in Ireland used to show the boundary of a farmer s field. The road is just a typical road. But sometimes at night passersby will see a woman and two small children sitting on this wall. They wear...
