By this time it must have been quite evident to William s father that the bent of his son s tastes and talents was toward engineering, and, realizing that he could nowhere obtain so thorough a preparation for that profession as at West Point, he very wisely turned his efforts in that direction. Owing to his connection with various public works he had already been able to command sufficient influence to procure a midshipman s warrant for his oldest son, John, in 1812, and now, in 1818, he also obtained for his third son, William, through the Hon. Thomas R. Gould, a member of Congress, an appointment as cadet at West Point. (Appendix F. G.) His second son, George, was a civil engineer, and was engaged upon the Champlain Canal and other State works. So it is evident that the career...
