Excerpt from Annual Report of the Canadian Club: Berlin, Ontario; 1913-1914 Scotland is a young country that believes in itself, and the people are always good, some being good for something, and the others good for nothing. By the coming of the Romans in 55 B. Who by the way did not conquer the Scots, the people learned how to build roads and bridges. The mission of England by the Normans, greatly influenced the Scots too. Since the Saxon came into the border counties, and ever after there were the Celts or Highlanders, and the Saxons or lowland-dersi; and the. Inter-marriage of these produced the typical Scot of to day. The beauties of the scenery, the rugged hills, the lovely river valleys, the wild tempestuous ocean about the islands, were described in a manner and a feeling that showed that Dr. Scott is still devotedly attached to his mother land. Edinburgh is the most interesting and wonderful of Scotland's cities, containing as it does so many reminders of her past history, as well as the halls of learning.
