CHAPTER XVII. ARKANSAS SCHOOLS. 1819-1905. In the pioneer days of Arkansas, the same difficulties that confronted the farmer and the lawyer were felt also by the teacher, and often more keenly. The children on the frontier had poor educational advantages, not because our forefathers did not believe in education, but because they had no money to establish schools. Then, too, the country was sparsely settled, the population as late as 183G being less...
